men. Please let us go to my mother's and not wait.

"O, yes, that's very likely," said Mr. Leggett, helped out his pipe and, chuckling with contempt, "Do you think to make me believe your list lies? I found you out plainly enough, sir, and I am satisfied that you are as genuine a villain as there is in the State. . . . But I will postpone settling with you for as long as you like. I shall then call you up again, and if you don't give me the whole truth then, I will give you something that'll make you miserable."

Mr. Richard's face turned as white as a sheet.

"Go to your work."

That enough of the indignations permitted.
